AGRICULTURAL FAIR.

A notice has been published that the Penobscot Agricultural Society will hold their annual Fair for the exhibition of Cattle, Stock, Agricultural productions and articles of mechanical and household manufacture, at Exeter, on Wednesday and Thursday, the 25th and 26th of September instant. The all-important interest of Agriculture to the wealth of a country and the comfort of its inhabitants has, we are glad to say, under the auspices of this society, received a large increase of attention in the County of Penobscot. The increasing neatness of the farms and farm houses in the towns about us, and the productiveness of the crops are quite apparent already; but although improvements are visible and certain, yet we have but just begun, although well begun. The influence of well conducted Agricultural Societies, in holding Fairs, collecting and disseminating useful and important information to farmers on matters relating to their business, has very properly received the sanction of every man who has been an attentive observer of their operations. The Penobscot Society has for several years been enabled to offer premiums for exhibition, sufficient to secure a respectable display, but for the want of funds, they have not been able to do as much for the encouragement of agriculture as the friends of that interest and of the Society could have wished, and those who feel an interest in the success of culture in this county should come forward and give in their names and aid the objects the Society would promote, by a contribution to its funds.

All former exhibitions have been limited to one day and of course matters have been so crowded as to preclude a great portion of the good which such occasions are calculated to produce. We are happy to notice that this year the exhibition will continue for two days and that ample provisions have been made for exhibiting to good advantage every article presented. The evening of the first day may be profitably occupied by a meeting of the Society and its friends for the discussion of important subjects, and the dissemination of information relative to the art in all of its departments.

It is surely important and can hardly fail to interest every man in the community to know the extent, character, and importance of the agricultural and mechanical interests of the country. We would suggest, therefore, that, as far as practicable, some one or more in each town collect all the information upon these subjects they are able, and present them to the meeting either through letters or addresses.

It would be well that each farmer in the county should feel sufficient interest in the approaching exhibition to give his attendance in company with his wife and daughters, with good specimens of his farm—oak, field, garden, and orchard products, and household manufactures. A large collection of these would make a brilliant display, and impart information and encourage healthful enterprise, and stimulate Yankee ingenuity all tending to enrich our country and raise her reputation. The effort can cost but little and would produce its own reward.

In the manufacturing and mechanical departments the exhibition should present many and interesting specimens, not only in those things that relate to farming but those relating to the convenience of society, to the comfort and happiness of man, the grand object of all pursuits and all labor.

It is then the duty of each mechanic in the country, whether in city or country, to take with him or to send by another, some article of manufacture some specimen of his workmanship—the more useful the article, the better, though it be common even, so that it be but neat.

The women, as they are always the life and soul of such exhibitions, or of every good thing, and without their influence, the benefit and spirit of them must die. We beseech them that is, we would were it necessary but they have too much good sense to make that necessary to present at the Fair, specimens of the workmanship of their hands. The work of the "bright little needle—the wheel, the loom—the dairy—the parlor, sitting room, and kitchen. Bring them all, without stint, and without fear. The committees will receive you with smiles none the less for yourselves, though accompanied by the most useful and beautiful of your work, but rather the more.

With suitable efforts, and we know the true value of the Society and many ardent friends of agriculture are doing all in their power, this exhibition will be a bright spot in the history of our county. All the world will be there to see and what heaps of butter and mountains of cheese and oceans of the namesake's and unnameable good things will they see! See? Our eyes glitter in expectation, and glittering eyes will there be in abundance, when the time comes! "Shaw's Corner" never saw such a time and such a company and all so happy and joyful too, as it will see at the time of the Fair.

THE GLOBE'S ARGUMENT. In defense of the Sub Treasury system, the Globe says, "we ought to have no paper money, because the Chinese Empire has delivered itself from the fatal fluctuations of the paper money system, and become a nation with a simple, solid, hard money government." This is pretty doctrine for a "democrat" to preach! The Globe perhaps would model our form of Government after that of the Hard Money Government of China. It would reduce our people to the condition of the Chinese, a government without paper money and quarterly without credit.

Fire at St Louis. The St Louis Bulletin gives an account of a very destructive fire in that city. It broke out in the four story stone block at the corner of Front and Vine streets. It originated in the store of Blaine, Tompkins, and Barret, which was entirely consumed extending on the north to the warehouse of Stettonius and January, where its progress was arrested by the fire proof store of H N Davis & Co. On the south, it destroyed the stores of G M Willing & Co., wholesale grocers Z N Roberts clothing store the wholesale drug store of Oscar Cobb, McKeye & Co's wholesale grocery, and two or three groceries and coffee houses belonging to J Rice and others.

The loss is variously estimated at from one to two hundred thousand dollars. It being impossible to estimate the value of the goods on storage the insurance will probably amount to thirty or forty thousand dollars.

Calamitous as this fire has been, the chief cause of regret is the loss of a number of lives.

Mr B L Turnbull, well known as a bookseller in that city—Mr Haydn, a clerk at Willing & Co., a stranger named Brewer, and it is supposed one or two others perished in the flames.

They were engaged in removing goods from the store of Mr Willing, when an explosion in the store of Blaine, Tompkins & Barret, threw down the stone wall of the building, crushing the frame building below.

Mr Enos Smith of Bucksport, in a deranged state of mind, left his home on the 11th instant, and has not been heard from. He is twenty six years of age, five feet seven inches high, light complexion, had on when he left home, a black jacket and blue vest and pantaloons. Any information concerning him will be gratefully received by his friends. Address Seth L Smith, Bucksport. Editors of papers will confer favorably giving publicity to this notice.

A large detachment of German emigrants, some seventy in number, of peculiar religious tenets, arrived on Saturday in town. They are poor, destitute, and purpose locating in this country, patriarch of Priests, a gentleman of unusual intelligence, informs us, that several thousands are now on their way to America. Some by the way of New York, and others via New Orleans, and that religious persecution has driven them to this country.

There is nothing peculiar in their appearance, more than is observed in German emigrants generally, but they are represented to be very poor.

CHAPTER SECOND

It is now necessary for us to retrace our steps and introduce a few new characters connected with the principal persons of our story.

In the course of a ride on a pleasant afternoon Luke Howard and his lively sister were overtaken by one of those violent thunder storms, which arise so unexpectedly during the period of the summer solstice. The ride had been prolonged, for there had been favorite lanes to thread and favorite flowers to gather, and the horses were gay as their riders and galloped untiringly on and on. Engrossed by their enjoyment they were unconscious of the fact that the sky had become rapidly overcast, and that volume upon volume of black vapor was rolling up from the horizon. There was no breeze abroad, no ripple on the surface of the pools of water by the way side, and no quiver in the tight leaves of the mountain ash. An instant elapsed, and they were startled by heavy peals of thunder, and intense bright flashes of lightning. The wind rising suddenly, roared among the branches of the trees, and prostrated whole fields of grain. Not a bird was abroad in the troubled air. Down came the blinding rain, pouring in unbroken sheets deluging the roads and meadows in an instant.

"The storm broke upon our equestrians when they were at some distance from any shelter, at the commencement of a long and narrow lane. They called to their horses and urged them forward against the furious tempest, but perhaps for the first time in their lives, the high spirited horses proved refractory and restive. The horse of Emily threw up his head, bucked, reared, but did not acquire her in within the walls of a riding school, and though somewhat startled, maintained her position and her hold upon the bridle. Her brother afforded her such assistance in the management of her horse as the furious plungings of his own steed permitted. At length the startled animal of Emily dashed off at full speed, and although Luke followed hard behind he could not quite overtake it. The runaway dashed onward with arrowy velocity, and followed the turnings of the road with appalling speed. Emily yet maintained her seat, but just opposite a larchie's cottage, an awful peal of thunder and a blinding flash of lightning caused the horse to rear almost upright, then plunging downward, he flung his beauteous rider, and with dashing rein and wild eyes, dashed along his homeward path, his loose man floating on the wind.

As soon as Luke arrived on the spot where his fair sister lay, he threw himself from his horse and raised her in his arms. She had fainted, and he bore her at once into the cottage opposite to which the accident happened. At the door he was met by two persons, an elderly man and an old woman, the latter of whom bade him enter, and received his charge with tokens of compassion. Emily was placed in an easy chair, and various remedies were employed to effect her restoration. In a short time she opened her eyes and gazed wildly about her, but soon recovered her senses, she smiled sweetly on her brother and assured him that she was not materially hurt. As soon as this was ascertained to be the case, the old lady assisted her in to her bed.

Luke was left alone with the master of the cottage. He appeared to be between fifty and sixty years of age, and might have been band some in his youth. Indeed there was still something majestic in the loftiness of a forehead scarred by time, and the silvery locks that floated over his neck and waved around his sunken cheeks. But to counteract the favorable opinion made by these circumstances and by a certain regularity of feature, there was a similitude in the sunken blue eye, and a sarcastic smile lurking in the corners of his mouth, which could not escape the keen observation of Luke. The form of the old man seemed cast in a large mould, though bowed with infirmity and toil, his dress was that of a person daily employed in the labors of the field. There was a singular courtesy and ease in his reception of his guest, which was a matter of surprise to the young man. After some casual observations the conversation turned upon the weather.

The storm has been violent, said Luke, but it is abating.

Yes, replied the old man, we shall have fair weather soon. Although brief, this tempest has not passed over without damage. Look at that tree prostrate on the ground. That tree was planted watered and cared for by my hand, and now it is totally destroyed.

Luke expressed his regret at so unexpected an event.

"Unexpected!" echoed the old man, no, no! I never yet had a thing I loved—not even an intimate shrub, that was not torn from me by violence.

On hearing him express himself with such vehemence, Luke gazed doubtfully upon him, at first thinking his wild energy to the workings of insanity. But the fire died speedily away from the eyes of the old man, and he added in a more sober mood.

We farmers, who live by our veg tables and our trees, are apt to get a little out of temper when the hope of years is cut short in a moment. The tree may be propped up, and may grow again, just as a bleeding body and a broken heart may be pulled up by a doctor and a minister, and the shattered frame continue to live, if that can be called life, which is dragged out in weariness.

At 12 morn the young man stared at his trap, and with a smile, with a smile.

There is a theme for moralizing in that occurrence, rescued the old gentleman. The fate of that tree is often shared by the great and happy in this world of trouble. At every moment when they have reached their prime, the summit of their hopes and honors, they are cut short by the sudden blast of adversity, and number the ground, like fallen giants. His hair is gray, and his head is bald, and his hair is good.

NEAR'S GENUINE VEGETABLE PULMONARY BALSMATIC SYRUP LIVER BPORT.

FOR Cure of Consumption, Coughs and Colds

More than 75,000 Bottles of this very valuable Medicine have been sold (principally in the State of Maine) since it was first offered to the public by the original inventor and proprietor, J. B.

Sears, a few years since.

It is undoubtedly superior to any other article of ferred to the public, as it seldom fails in giving relief where it is taken in due season.

Although the superior virtues of this medicine are well known, and its qualities highly approved by many of the most respectable of the Medical Factility, the following certificates are added for the satisfaction of those who may be afflicted with these diseases for which it is designed, several others may be seen on the bill of directions accompanying each bottle.

The undersigned takes pleasure in mentioning the prompt and essential relief which he experienced in a severe attack on the lungs in January last from the use of the Vegetable Pulmonary Balsamic

Syrup of Liverwort, and cheerfully testifies that in his opinion, it is a most beneficial medicine in consumptive complaints, violent colds, or settled cough and earnestly recommends this medicine to all who are suffering under afflictions of this kind.
